Dear Mr. Cooper:

Recently personnel from this office observed a large amount of oil, apparently used crank case oil, in a drainage ditch to the west of your office building.

It appears that this is an accumulation of oil over a long period of time. Also, upon further investigation, a large amount of the same material was observed on the ground to the east of your maintenance building. Let me advise you that by dumping this waste oil on your property in an area where it can leave your property, either by natural drainage or be carried off by storm water, is an apparent violation of City, State, and Federal Law.

A fairly easy solution to this problem would be to store all of your waste oil in a storage tank and have the tank pumped out at regular intervals by a waste oil reclaimer.

If you have any questions feel free to call.

Yours truly,

Eugene Pabst
